All of Us Research Program sharing program data

The All of Us Data and Research Center is making it easy to view program's data. You can now use the Data Browser to explore some of the data All of Us has collected. The Data Browser, currently in beta testing, is open to all. It shows broad counts for things like survey answers, diseases, and medications. These counts combine information from many participants. For example, you can see the number of All of Us participants in Michigan. Your personal information will be kept private. No one will be able to use the information to identify you. You can also see snapshots of the latest enrollment statistics.

Here are just a few things we have learned about the All of Us participants:

- Approximately 33% of participants who have contributed electronic health record data to the program have primary high blood pressure. Primary high blood pressure is high blood pressure that isn't caused by another condition.
- Approximately 63% of participants who have completed the Overall Health program survey feel extremely confident completing medical forms on their own.
- Pain is currently the top condition of participants who have contributed electronic health record data to the program.
- Radiographic imaging is currently the top procedure of participants who have contributed electronic health record data to the program.

Reminder: Login to your Participant Portal

Do you have new surveys? Now's a great time to pop in to the Participant Portal and fill out surveys about your health and lifestyle. Three new surveys about health care access, family history and personal medical history become available about 90 days after you complete the consent. This will help researchers better understand connections between our genetics, environments, and health.
